Personal Vendetta?

I have a suspicion that this may be what's happening here with this supposed "good faith" attempt to get to the bottom of possible wrongdoing in the Osage Nation Treasury Department. I find it curious that Raymond Red Corn is the apparent instigator of this sudden quest for accountability from the Treasurer and Executive Branch. His loyalty to the Gray Administration the previous 4 years demonstrated total and complete support of the blatant, outright "inexplicable" actions of Gray and his Treasurer's office. Why all the concern now?

I use the term "inexplicable" because in Red Corn's Update 147 sent out this morning, he states: "The Osage Nation Congress has "heard" allegations of rather inexplicable actions on the part of the Treasurer regarding accounts under the control of his office."

Based on hearsay this action will be taken?

Something Doesn't Smell Right...

The voting records are still available at my website. Anyone who wishes to investigate further will find that hardly ever and certainly VERY seldom, did Red Corn ever vote against the wishes of Jim Gray, regardless of how outlandish the legislation may have been. I expect you'll find on many occasions where he in fact proposed legislation that was no doubt at the pleasure of Gray. Why is it then, that with all the questionable acts performed by Gray, it's now all of the sudden unacceptable? Why it is that Mr. Kemble at the instigation of Red Corn is being held to a higher standard than that of the previous administration?

Had Red Corn sincerely concerned himself with suspected improprieties, he would have as would have other Congress members, proposed legislation to bring in an outside auditing firm on their first day of session under the new Administration. Eight out of the twelve Congress members were witness to the improprieties of the Gray Administration and not one time did they consider extensive audits to clear up the many questions that remain unanswered. The eight Congress members witnessed Gray "write in" remarks on legislation that in fact changed amounts of allocations, they witnessed the S-510 Account having been transferred to Citizens Bank, and they witnessed Gray's finagling to come up with funds to purchase Sugar Loaf Mound and more.

Why is it then that today, this Congress is pointing a finger at this Treasurer who will have been on the job for a mere 8 months?

Kemble's Confirmation

His first day on the job was October 18, 2010. The Osage Nation Congress interviewed Kemble on October 7 and he was confirmed as the new Osage Nation Treasurer.

Benny Polacca, Osage News, reported on October 18, 2010: "Congress voted 9-1 on Kemble's confirmation with Red Corn casting the lone “no” vote. Absent for the confirmation votes that day were Congresswomen Shannon Edwards and Alice Goodfox.”

Ever Open The Wrong Can?

I know I’ve opened the wrong can in my life time. It’s pretty upsetting when you think your opening asparagus but find out you grabbed a spinach can instead.

Right here and now is the Shareholders’ BIG opportunity to put a kink in the neck of the snake. Because you have before you an actual legal action by the Osage Nation Congress clearly admitting to suspected wrongdoing having to do with Shareholder funds, now is the time to strike and strike hard. As I said before, it’s time to play hard ball.

Typically not being informed by the Mineral Council as to exactly how they intend to handle this confiscation or attempted confiscation of shareholder accounts, I recommend that you call your Mineral Council members and ask them what it is they intend to do.

To allow another missed opportunity such as this could prove to be detrimental. Below is a list of telephone numbers of the Council members. Bother them with phone calls until they come up with the answer you’re looking for. The long awaited answer from your Council members is: We are going to contact the BIA and let them know we need an investigation of our own and an audit of our own immediately.

Take advantage of this opportunity! The Congress just opened up the wrong can of worms. Let’s make this audit count. To only go back 8 months would be ludicrous! The real scamming took place during Gray’s reign clear back to 2000. It’s time to get the Feds in on this. In fact it’s past time. For Congress to go after a newcomer for something that was done before but ignored; is just not going to work. Fair is fair. No way can we sit back and exclude the real time of the heist. We can’t allow this new Treasurer to pay for the past administrations wrongdoing. We need a bare bones audit clear back to 2000.

Before I Close

Here is an excellent run down regarding the Hostile Takeover of the Mineral Estate. This post was written by an anonymous poster. This person explains the threat very well: “Its about regulatory authority and you know it. “This tired line of “they can't and haven't tried to take your headright” is a bunch of BS. The Jech case is about the Nation having regulatory authority over the Mineral Estate without having to be directly answerable to the shareholders. The Nation has tried numerous times by various means to administer and steer the Mineral Estate for its convenience and profit (MOU, TERA, sitting on leases, sending exec. dept. officials to producers conferences, ect.) at, arguably, the expense of the shareholders. --- Mr./Ms. Osage, it wasn't so long ago in our history that we should have forgotten the price we pay for having someone else control our purse-strings. The guardian system cost our people dearly. Some paid with their lives for the greed of group of people who didn't have to answer to anyone. Many more of our people were cheated out of every other nickel they got by guardians arrangements with local business to charge “Osage prices” to our people. That situation is not so different than what this constitution has set up. You have a group of people in a single department of the executive office who claim to have all regulatory authority over the Mineral Estate, who don't have to answer directly to those who's assets they claim to direct. The situation sets up the old "Osage price" scheme the guardians profited from, only it has been institutionalized. For instance the Nation can partner with an oil company to produce oil, and by law not have to pay the highest posted royalty price. The Nation can do this by means of laws like TERA. And... the shareholder's check is reduced. The Nation can parter with folks like Rod Hartness and require producers to use his pipeline and earthwork services, even though they have their own or may be able to get the same service cheaper elsewhere. Thus, driving away prospective producers. And... the shareholder's check is reduced. The Nation can sit on leases for months at a time because the producer didn't contribute to their campaign or maybe just because they have other more pressing things to do. The mineral isn't produced and the producer leaves the Osage. And... the shareholder's check is reduced. The Nation can inject itself into lawsuits the shareholders have against the BIA and without making any overt claims take 20% off the top by virtue of laws never meant to apply to the Osage shareholders. And... the shareholder's check is reduced. --- These are not hypothetical they are real happening since 2006 and all things that have, could and will cost the shareholders. The question is not so much why are the shareholders scared but why do you and those of your ilk want to take us back to the days of the unaccountable guardian? When the BIA cheats us at least we can take them to court and get a $333,000,000.00 award. What chance would we stand getting anything form a broke Nation in an Osage Nation court were they make all the rules? --- The Nation doesn't need the Mineral Estate for it's working capital it has plenty of opportunity elsewhere. The fact the Nation refuses to pursue those opportunities, rather opting to fight over the Mineral Estate is an economic aim to the detriment of all Osages."----

One More Thing

This new report regarding Mineral Funds being tampered with has spurred more people to send letters to Senator Coburn and Representative Lucas. The letters are still available at the HOT TOPICS page of my website. If you haven't sent yours yet, consider doing so. We have got to get outside help. Remember the Shareholder Lawsuit also. We need to keep it strong by supporting it financially.
